THE EPISTLES OF SENECA

diu cogitando. Audimus aliquando voces imperitorum dicentium: “sciebam” hoc mihi restare”; sapiens scit sibi omnia restare. Quicquid factum est, dicit:
“sciebam.”

VALE.

LXXVII.

SENECA LVCILO SVO SALVEM

1 Subito nobis hodie Alexandrinarum naves apparerunt, quae praemittit solent et nuntiare secuturae classis adventum; tabellarias vocant. Gratia illarum Campaniae aspectus est; omnis in pilis Puteolorum
turba consistit et ex ipso genere velorum Alexandrinas quavis in magna turba navium intellegit. Solis enim licet siparum intendere, quod in alto omnes

2 habent naves. Nulla enim res aequo adiuvat cursum
quam summa pars veli; illinc maxime navis urgetur.
Itaque quoties ventus incoeruit maiorque est quam
expedit, antemna summittitur; minus habet virium flatus ex humili. Cum intraveres Capreas et promun-turium, ex quo

Alta procellos astrum vertice Pallas,
ceterae velo iubentur esse contentae; siparum
Alexandrinarum insignem est.2

3 In hoc omnium discursu properantium ad litum mag-
nam ex pigritia mea sensi voluptatem, quod epistulas
meorum accepturus non properavi seire, quis illic esset

1 The old editors read nesciebam, which seems more in accord with the argument.
2 indicium before est deleted by Muretus.

a Puteoli, in the bay of Naples, was the head-quarters in Italy of the important grain-trade with Egypt, on which the Roman magistrates relied to feed the populace.

b Author unknown.

168
EPISTLES LXXVI., LXXVII.

others lighten by long endurance. We sometimes hear the inexperienced say: "I knew that this was in store for me." But the wise man knows that all things are in store for him. Whatever happens, he says: "I knew it." Farewell.

LXXVII. ON TAKING ONE'S OWN LIFE

Suddenly there came into our view to-day the "Alexandrian" ships,—I mean those which are usually sent ahead to announce the coming of the fleet; they are called "mail-boats." The Campanians are glad to see them; all the rabble of Puteoli stand on the docks, and can recognize the "Alexandrian" boats, no matter how great the crowd of vessels, by the very trim of their sails. For they alone may keep spread their topsails, which all ships use when out at sea, because nothing sends a ship along so well as its upper canvas; that is where most of the speed is obtained. So when the breeze has stiffened and becomes stronger than is comfortable, they set their yards lower; for the wind has less force near the surface of the water. Accordingly, when they have made Capreae and the headland whence

Tall Pallas watches on the stormy peak, all other vessels are bidden to be content with the mainsail, and the topsail stands out conspicuously on the "Alexandrian" mail-boats.

While everybody was bustling about and hurrying to the water-front, I felt great pleasure in my laziness, because, although I was soon to receive letters from my friends, I was in no hurry to know how my affairs

169
THE EPISTLES OF SENECA

rerum mearum status, quid adferrent; olim iam nec perit quicquam mihi nec adquiritur. Hoc, etiam si senex non esse, fuerat sentiendum; nunc vero multo magis. Quantulumcumque haberem, tamen plus iam mihi superesset viatici quam viae, praesertim cum eam viam sinus\(^1\) ingressi, quam peragere non est necesse.

4 Iter imperfectum erit, si in media parte aut citra petitum locum steteris; vita non est imperfecta, si honesta est. Ubicumque desines, si bene desines, tota est. Saepe autem et fortiter desinendum est et non ex maximis causis; nam nec eae\(^2\) maximae sunt, quae nos tenent.

5 Tullius Marcellinus, quem optime noveras, adulescens quietus\(^3\) et cito senex, morbo et non insanabili correptus sed longo et molesto et multa imperante, coepit deliberare de morte. Convocavit complures amicos. Unusquisque aut quia timidus erat, id illi suadebat, quod sibi suasisset, aut quia adulator et blandus, id consilium daban, quod delibera liberanti gratius fore suspicabatur; amicus noster Stoicus, homo egregius et, ut verbis illum, quibus laudari dignus est, laudem, vir fortis ac strenuus, videtur mihi optime illum cohortatus. Sic enim coepit: “Noli, mi Marcelline, torqueri, tamquam de

\(1\) sinus later MSS.; sumus VPh.
\(2\) nec et VPh.
\(3\) J. W. Duff would read, with Kron., vietus, “old,” “withered.”

---

\(a\) This thought, found in Ep. xii. 6 and often elsewhere, is a favourite with Seneca.

\(b\) It is not likely that this Marcellinus is the same person as the Marcellinus of Ep. xxix., because of their different views on philosophy (Summers). But there is no definite evidence for or against.

\(c\) A Roman compliment; the Greeks would have used καλὸς καγαθός; cf. Horace, Ep. i. 7. 46

Strenuus et fortis causisque Philippus agendis Clarus.
EPISTLE LXXVII.

were progressing abroad, or what news the letters were bringing; for some time now I have had no losses, nor gains either. Even if I were not an old man, I could not have helped feeling pleasure at this; but as it is, my pleasure was far greater. For, however small my possessions might be, I should still have left over more travelling-money than journey to travel, especially since this journey upon which we have set out is one which need not be followed to the end. An expedition will be incomplete if one stops half-way, or anywhere on this side of one's destination; but life is not incomplete if it is honourable. At whatever point you leave off living, provided you leave off nobly, your life is a whole. Often, however, one must leave off bravely, and our reasons therefore need not be momentous; for neither are the reasons momentous which hold us here.

Tullius Marcellinus, a man whom you knew very well, who in youth was a quiet soul and became old prematurely, fell ill of a disease which was by no means hopeless; but it was protracted and troublesome, and it demanded much attention; hence he began to think about dying. He called many of his friends together. Each one of them gave Marcellinus advice,—the timid friend urging him to do what he had made up his mind to do; the flattering and wheedling friend giving counsel which he supposed would be more pleasing to Marcellinus when he came to think the matter over; but our Stoic friend, a rare man, and, to praise him in language which he deserves, a man of courage and vigour, admonished him best of all, as it seems to me. For he began as follows: "Do not torment yourself, my dear Marcellinus, as if the question which you are re magna deliberes. Non est res magna vivere; omnes servi tui vivunt, omnia animalia; magnum est honeste mori, prudenter, fortiter. Cogita, quamdiu iam idem facias: cibus, somnus, libido, per hunc circulum curritur. Mori velle non tantum prudens aut fortis aut miser, etiam fastidiosus potest."
The Epistles of Seneca

7 Non opus erat suasore illi, sed adiutore; servi parere nolebant. Primum detraxit illis metum et indicavit tune familia periculum adire, cum in-certum esset, an mors domini voluntaria fuisset;
aliaque tam mali exempli esse occidere dominum

8 quam prohibere. Deinde ipsum Marcellinum ad-monuit non esse inhumanum, quemadmodum cena peracta reliquiae circumstantibus dividantur, sic peracta vita aliquid porrigi iis, qui totius vitae ministri fuissent. Erat Marcellinus facilis animi et liberalis, etiam cum de suo fieret. Minutas itaque summulas distribuit flentibus servis et illos ultro

9 consolatus est. Non fuit illi opus ferro, non sanguine;
triduo abstinuit et in ipso cubiculo poni tabernaculum insit. Solum deinde inlatum est, in quo
diu iacuit et calda subinde suffusa paulatim defecit, ut aiebat, non sine quadam voluptate, quam adferre
solet lenis dissolutio non inexperta nobis, quos aliquando liquit animus.

\footnote{a For this frequent "banquet of life" simile see Ep.
xcviii. 15 ipse vitae plenus est, etc.}

\footnote{b So that the steam might not escape. One thinks of Seneca's last hours: Tac. Ann. xv. 64 stagnum calidos aqua in atrocit setexin balneo inlatum et vapore eius exani-
matus.}

172
EPISTLE LXXVII.

weighing were a matter of importance. It is not an important matter to live; all your slaves live, and so do all animals; but it is important to die honourably, sensibly, bravely. Reflect how long you have been doing the same thing: food, sleep, lust,—this is one's daily round. The desire to die may be felt, not only by the sensible man or the brave or unhappy man, but even by the man who is merely surfeited. Marcellinus did not need someone to urge him, but rather someone to help him; his slaves refused to do his bidding. The Stoic therefore removed their fears, showing them that there was no risk involved for the household except when it was uncertain whether the master's death was self-sought or not; besides, it was as bad a practice to kill one's master as it was to prevent him forcibly from killing himself. Then he suggested to Marcellinus himself that it would be a kindly act to distribute gifts to those who had attended him throughout his whole life, when that life was finished, just as, when a banquet is finished, the remaining portion is divided among the attendants who stand about the table. Marcellinus was of a compliant and generous disposition, even when it was a question of his own property; so he distributed little sums among his sorrowing slaves, and comforted them besides. No need had he of sword or of bloodshed; for three days he fasted and had a tent put up in his very bedroom. Then a tub was brought in; he lay in it for a long time, and, as the hot water was continually poured over him, he gradually passed away, not without a feeling of pleasure, as he himself remarked,—such a feeling as a slow dissolution is wont to give. Those of us who have ever fainted know from experience what this feeling is.
THE EPISTLES OF SENeca

Rata et fixa sunt et magna atque aeterna necessitate ducuntur. Eo ibis, quo omnia sunt. Quod tibi novi est? Ad hanc legem natus es. Hoc patri tuo accidit, hoc matri, hoc maioribus, hoc omnibus ante te, hoc omnibus post te. Series invicta et nulla mutabilis ope inligavit ac trahit cumeta. Quantus te populus moriturorum sequetur? Quantus comitaa For the same thought cf. Ep. xlix. 3 punctum est quod vicimus et adhuc puncto minus.

b Vergil, Aeneid, vi. 376.
The Complete Text can be found on our CD:
Primary Literary Sources For Ancient Literature
which can be purchased on our Website:
www.Brainfly.net
or
by sending $64.95 in check or money order to:
Brainfly Inc.
5100 Garfield Ave. #46
Sacramento  CA  95841-3839

TEACHER’S DISCOUNT:
If you are a TEACHER you can take advantage of our teacher’s discount.  Click on Teachers Discount on our website (www.Brainfly.net) or Send us $55.95 and we will send you a full copy of Primary Literary Sources For Ancient Literature AND our 5000 Classics CD (a collection of over 5000 classic works of literature in electronic format (.txt)) plus our Wholesale price list.

If you have any suggestions such as books you would like to see added to the collection or if you would like our wholesale prices list please send us an email to:
webcomments@brainfly.net